by the manufacturers. An Expert Committee, which included experts in Electronics also, had examined the details to confirm this position and to propose alternatives. There will be no financial loss on account of condemnation of these machines as their book value had become 'NIL'.

No new machines have been purchased as yet. A Notice inviting tenders has been issued. The machines proposed to be purchased will be of the latest technology in operation and available in the country. In the circumstance, there can be no question about their availability in 1985-86.

As stated earlier, the rate of obsolescence in the field of electronics is particularly high. That being so, the new machines will, in due course, also become obsolete. Whenever this happens, appropriate action will be taken to updatejupgrade the facilities.

In the light of what has been stated above, there is no need to review the decision already taken.
